

Bio – Youth and Resilience

Sir Aaron C. Mason grew up in a single parent home. While growing up, Sir Aaron experienced many variables that had the potential to impede His ability to get the most out of life. Some of these variables included domestic violence, gangs, drug abuse, and life-threatening illnesses. These variables would result to Sir Aaron's placement into foster care at 10 years of age. While in foster care, He surrounded him with great role models who genuinely cared about his well-being. He also began to believe in his ability to break through the barriers that kept him from living up to his full potential.

After leaving foster care and reuniting with his family, Sir Aaron began to approach life differently. He grew confident in his ability to succeed. His newfound confidence led him to great rewards. He began to excel as a student, as an athlete and most importantly, as a person. Sir Aaron earned three college degrees and now working towards his fourth. It was not until Sir Aaron's placement into foster care that he learned of the many opportunities that life had to offer. Sir Aaron's life was not picture perfect, but it has made who he is today.